

Rascal By Ben M

1. Noun
2. Adjective
3. Adjective
4. Adverb
5. Pronoun
6. Noun
7. Interjection
8. Preposition
9. Verb - Present Ends In Ing
10. Conjunction

Rascal By Ben M

Losing a Noun is not always Adjective. It can happen if you or your friend moves away or changes schools. But can you imagine how Adjective it would be to Adverb let go of your best friend? Do you think you would be able to do it? Sterling has had Rascal for almost a year, and he realizes Rascal is growing up. Rascal is getting more intelligent, getting into fights, and is trying to start a family. Sterling thinks he is being selfish by keeping Rascal any longer than her has, and knows he will have to let Rascal go free soon. Pronoun had finally finished his Noun, and decides to take rascal down the river and let him go there. As I read this, I thought, interjection! Dont do it! But in spite of my hopes, he went Preposition ahead and did it anyway. He packs a picnic lunch and starts Verb - Present ends in ING downstream. As he did, I was thinking, Hell never do it. Rascal is his best friend. But, of course, I was wrong. Sterling waits until the moon comes up, and hears what he is hoping for. It is a female raccoon, looking for a mate. Rascal hears it and goes to the prow of the canoe Conjunction calls back. After about a minute, he jumps off the canoe and swims to shore. Some people can freely let go of their best friends. Personally, I dont think I could willingly do it. It takes hard determination and courage, not to mention much perseverance.