Our engagement

Three years after that _____Adjective_____ night at McCarthy's, Angie thought she was in for a simple anniversary dinner. John, on the other hand, had _____Adjective_____ ideas. He picked the _____Adjective_____ setting: low lights, _____Noun - Plural_____ on every table, and so few _____Noun - Plural_____ some would think he rented out the entire _____Noun_____. The evening was gifted with _____Adjective_____ food, wine, and conversation. After dinner and through some slight prodding, John convinced Angie to return to the scene of that first _____Adjective_____ night. Angie began to _____Noun_____ if there were ulterior motives at play. They arrived at McCarthy's, and to no one's surprise, the _____Adjective_____ still lingered there. Angie's suspicions rose to a crescendo when John led her to outside to the exact table they had occupied three years before. However, to her _____Adjective_____ they _____Adverb_____ talked for what seemed to be a _____Adverb_____ long time. And just as Angie's suspicions were _____Verb - Past Tense_____, John began the eloquent sentence that changed both of their lives forever: "So Ang,.... well we have a _____Adjective_____ thing going here...and we love each other...and I have been thinking...I think we should make this a _____Adjective_____ thing...Will You _____Verb - Base Form_____ Me?" And as _____Pronoun_____ fairy tales go, she said "_____Adverb_____."
