A Day in the Lab

_____Sound_____ goes your alarm clock. Time to get up and get to work in the lab! You _____Verb Base Form_____ out of bed, brush your _____Part of Body_____, put on your favorite _____Adjective_____ scrubs and run out the door. Of course, you have to stop for _____Food_____ on your way in to work so that you can be energized and fueled for your shift. You pull into the parking lot, _____Verb Base Form_____ into the hospital and clock in. Only _____Number_____ minutes late! Nice!

You walk into the lab and your coworkers are so _____Emotion_____ to see you. They have so much to tell you from their busy shift. First of all, there are _____Number_____ draws that need to be done! The phlebotomists are all out on the floors drawing blood as _____Adverb_____ as they can. The tube station is full.

In the distance, you can hear a _____Adjective_____ alarm going off. You can't quite recognize the sound.

"What instrument is that alarm coming from?" you ask your coworker.

"Oh, that's just the _____Noun_____ machine, it has been going off all shift!"

You are very confused, but before you can respond, you hear an announcement overhead. "May I have your attention please: _____Noun_____ alert, _____Location_____, room _____Number_____!" You rush into the Blood Bank to pack a cooler of _____Noun_____ to send to the code. "Since when do we stock that in our blood bank?!" you wonder to yourself.

Heading back out to the lab, you see something _____Adjective_____ on the floor. Upon further investigation, you realize that it is _____Liquid_____ leaking out of the Chemistry Line! That can't be good!

"STAT _____Noun_____", a phlebotomist says as they drop off a bag of specimens. Oh good, a hematology sample . You take the tube of _____Noun_____ out of the bag and load it onto the Sysmex. Of course, it needs a diff. You make your slide, get it stained, and put it on the microscope. You have never seen anything like this before! There are dozens of _____Adjective_____ _____Noun_____ all over the first field you see! That will surely need to be submitted for a path review.

A technologist _____Verb Present ends in S_____ out of the microbiology department. "Has anyone seen a _____Color_____ top swab laying around? It is a STAT _____Part of Body_____ culture!" You check all of the usual spots, and find the missing
