Once Upon A Time

Once upon a time there was a Noun named Proper noun that lived in the forest. The rabbit loved to live there because, there were Adjective trees and big green leaves in which provided shade, food, and shelter. One day a company named City Builders came from Jefferson City and scouted out the land for excavation. The committee decided the land was a good site for a shopping mall and then started to clear the land. The rabbit heard them and decided to tell all his friends in the forest. "If this company tears down our land we will not have food or shelter for survival!"; said Bronco"; "; We have to do something before we cannot survive and we all die"; "said the other animals."; All the animals quietly gathered together and decided to get with the people of the city and explain if they take the land from the animals we will die and then there will be no more food source for the people to eat in the future. The animals and the committee from City Builders gathered in a meeting and decided the situation was not going to hurt the future and the new plan for the excavation would begin on January 1, 2013. The animals went back to the forest and packed up their belongings and moved deeper into the forest away from civilization. The move caused a great stress and the more land they took the less the animals had left for survival. Eventually the animal Noun such as the rabbits, deer, and birds became extinct. The moral of the story is what you do Noun will effect what will happen tomorrow.
