The Catcher in the Rye

I've _____^{Past tense verb} in New York all my life, and I know Central Park like the back of my _____^{Noun} because I used to _____^{Verb} there all the time and ride my bike when I was a kid, but I had the most _____^{Adjective} trouble finding that lagoon that night. I knew right where it was--it was right near _____^{Location} _____^{Location} _____^{Location} and all--but I still couldn't find it. I kept _____^{Verb ending in} _____^{ing} and _____^{Verb ending in ing} and it kept getting _____^{Adjective} and _____^{Adjective} and _____^{Adjective} and _____^{Adjective}. I didn't see one _____^{Noun} the whole time I was in the park. I'm just as glad. I probably would've _____^{Past tense verb} about a mile if I had. Then, finally, I found it. What it was, it was partly frozen and partly not frozen. But I didn't see any _____^{Plural noun} around. I walked all around the whole lake--I nearly fell in once, in fact--but I didn't see a single _____^{Noun}. I thought maybe if there were any around, they might be asleep or something near the edge of the water, near the grass and all. That's how I _____^{Adverb} fell in. But I couldn't find any.
