pleasure pain principle

Pleasure-Pain Principle. --From the Adjective standpoint psychoanalysis supposes that the mental representations of the Plural noun have a cathexis of definite quantities of Noun and that it is the purpose of the mental Noun to hinder any damming-up of these Plural noun and to keep as Adjective as possible the total amount of the Plural noun to which it is subject. The course of mental Plural noun is Adverb regulated by the "; pleasure-pain principle "; and pain is thus is some way Past tense verb to an increase of Noun and pleasure to a decrease. In the course of development the original pleasure principle undergoes a Noun with reference to the external world, giving place to the "; Noun "; whereby the mental Noun learns to Verb the pleasure of satisfaction and to Verb temporarily feelings of pain.
