Health Inequalities

Although both sides can agree that our current system is flawed, our opinions diverge when it comes to _____ Verb - Present Tense solutions to fixing the holes in the _____ Proper Noun healthcare model. Our opponents have suggested that we implement the Canadian healthcare system in the United States in order to update the structure of our system. However, we do not believe that the Canadian model is suitable in our country due to the innate _____ Noun - Plural in the Canadian system, the disservice this model would bring upon American doctors, and differences between the two countries that would not allow the Canadian system to thrive.

One of the largest flaws in the Canadian _____ Preposition or subordinating conjunction is that with the single payer system, _____ Adverb do not receive timely care. Not only is it unfair for patients to have to wait for long periods of time to receive serious medical procedures, but it is also extremely _____ Adjective that citizens who can afford _____ Adjective - Comparative care are forbidden by law to seek it _____ Adverb. According to the Fraser Institute, a Canadian think tank, in 2003, the average Canadian waited more than four months for treatment by a specialist once referred by a practitioner. It also took about 6 weeks for cancer patient to receive the first steps of treatment after being _____ Verb - Past Tense.

Because special _____ Modal may take too long to receive, people who do have the money to travel and seek private care have been leaving the country to get care in the United States. This has led to a two-tiered system, leaving the poor forced to endure delayed care.
