April 20, 2012

Dear _____name of your child_____,

As you prepare for your upcoming final exams and end-of-the-year papers and projects, I thought you might like to hear an _____Adjective_____ story about when I was in college, all those years ago.

The year was _____an historical year_____, yes the Dark Ages, and we did not have nearly the distractions available to us that you have today. No iPods, cell phones, or Facebook. We had to resort to playing our _____name of band or musician_____ records when we wanted to delay our studying. We would put those _____color adjective_____ disks on our stereo and play the music _____Adverb_____. The entire dorm would start _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ and _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ throughout the hall. Our social media consisted of writing _____Adjective_____ messages on each others dry erase memo boards, which hung on all of our dorm doors. Once we settled down, we would fortify ourselves with _____beverage_____ and _____Adjective_____ _____food_____. Those less studious people among us would choose _____beverage_____ and _____food_____, and maybe even smoke some _____flammable material_____.

Since we didnt have computers, we would have to _____action verb_____ to the library, which as you know, was uphill all the way, both directions. There we used a card catalogue to look up journals and books about the _____historical event_____ and the War of _____Noun - Plural_____. Once we had taken notes, using only a _____uncommon writing instrument_____ and paper, wed trudge back to our dorms and begin typing on our typewriter, using only our _____body part_____. We did not have spell-check, so we had to resort to using a dictionary.

Our _____Adjective_____ parents rarely bothered us because they were worried about their long distance phone bills.

They could really only nag us by sending us a letter that arrived by mail every few _____unit of time plural_____, rather than by sending us _____unpleasant adjective_____ text messages. Arent you lucky that I only text you to tell you about _____name of celebrity you like_____!

Anyway, I know that you are a very smart and _____Adjective_____ young person, and you will absolutely do _____superlative adverb_____ on these upcoming exams and projects. Study hard! I love you.

_____Your name Mom or Dad_____
