Advice Column

Dear Dr _____Last name_____,

I think that my husband is _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ on me, but I don't know how to be sure. I'm thinking of hiring a _____Noun_____, but I know that he would be offended that I do not trust him. What do you recommend I do to _____Verb - Base Form_____ my relationship?

_____Adverb_____,

Concerned _____Noun_____

Dear CW,

I understand your concern. _____Noun_____ is becoming more and more common, and it is a _____Adjective_____ experience. It doesn't have to end that way, however. You must maintain _____Noun_____ that it will work out. Your suspicion could be affecting your behaviour , and your _____Noun_____ may be responding to that. I have seen this happen many times. A wife sees the _____Noun - Plural_____ of others her age _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ apart, then worries that the same thing will happen to hers. Her suspicion leads her to be more _____Adjective_____ and _____Adjective_____ toward her spouse as she tries to gather clues that he is _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____. Then he draws away because being with her is no longer _____Adjective_____. This cycles until eventually they _____Verb - Base Form_____ out of love and one or the other cheats or _____Verb - Present ends in S_____.

I am not saying that this will happen to you. I recommend that you talk to him about it in a _____Adjective_____ manner.

I cannot say enough that _____Noun_____ is the most _____Adjective_____ thing in a marriage. It is likely that he has had similar _____Noun - Plural_____, and as you talk about it, you will _____Verb - Base Form_____ closer. If after several attempts to talk it over he remains _____Adjective_____, then and only then you may consider investigating how he spends his time away from _____Noun_____.

Remember to listen to him and try to understand why he acts as he does without jumping to _____Noun - Plural_____ . _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ is more important than _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ in a relationship.
