More stories at WordBlanks.com

Brittany and Jonathan

1. Verb - Past Tense _____
2. Proper Noun _____
3. Proper Noun _____

Brittany and Jonathan

Jonathan and I first _____Verb - Past Tense_____ the morning before I left for my mission trip to Mexico for one week in 2007. Stephen was going on the trip too, and we had been friends for a few years, but I had never met Jonathan til this morning when he, along with two other guys, provided snacks for our team before leaving on the trip. Over my week in _____Proper Noun_____, I felt God really challenging me to finally surrender my heart to him and stop looking for someone to date. I told God that I would not be the one to look, but allow him to provide. The day after I got home from Mexico, I was upset after talking to my parents and desiring to talk to someone who would understand my desire to go to _____Proper Noun_____ college. My phone rang. I didn't recognize the number but answered anyway. It was Jonathan. It took me a second to figure out how the heck he got my number and why he was calling me to hang out. But he said a bunch of people were going to Yorktown beach to hang out, so I went. After talking for a few minutes, I somehow began to spill my guts about what God had been teaching me and how I wanted to go to Bible college. He asked to pray for me. So there we were, a group of random friends all sitting down on the beach as Jonathan prayed for me. I thought that was the coolest thing. After that day, we began talking and hanging out more often. We did this for an entire month til we went to the Rascal Flatts concert (which I was able to get him to pay for...oops!) and he held my hand to the song " Feels Like Today". I texted my best friends and told them! He then asked me to be his girlfriend at a local park after the concert :)

©2026 WordBlanks.com · All Rights Reserved.