High in the park

My day began pretty	Adjective	Wake up, eat	Noun	_, pull on jeans, ca	all in sick to wor	k and head to Dolo. Turns out my	Noun	_ (that lackluster ass	s-hat, dirty	water, dic*-lipped	, anti-poon wast	e of sexual organs and air) decided to	break up e	edibles in my cereal	in hopes th	at I would eat it a	nd then go to wo	rk super high.
It worked, I was high. Re	ally high. S	o high I could taste	colors and	touch emotions. U	Jp was happiness	s and left was pink. But, unlike the	Adjective	acceptance th	nat comes f	romAdverb	doing drugs, Adverb doing the	em is much	different. I didn't kr	now how I g	got high, which lea	ad me to think I	was having a stroke or that I had died	and this wa	as some weird limbo	o. Ultimate	ly I decided that I	was still dreamin	ng. This was a mistake.
Accepting the fact that I	was lucid dr	reaming, I got half n	aked and _	Preposition or subord	inating conjunction	_ myself while running down Guer	rrero street ((don't judge me). I a	rrived at th	e park with a half	eaten Mexi-pop	and 1 can of Proper Noun (if	you know l	now I got these thing	gs please le	t me know and if	I robbed a store,	I'm sorry and I will repay you.) I sa	•	·		· street mural. I would go _ . As I approached to drop	my finest p	oick-up lines, I tripp	ed. I must l	have hit my head o	on a Noun	because woke up in the grass facedown and you were gone. If you remember seeing a clumsy boy knock himself out, I'd love to take you to dinner at Gracias Madre. Also, if you know who went through my pockets while I was unconscious I would really appreciate that too. I'm missing an filled with Celine Dion's greatest hits.

Always,
Joseph
