Trust is a powerful thing. Distrust is something that is even more powerful. Protection is one more thing that can be _____Adverb_____ powerful if not _____Adjective_____ in the correct way. When someone treats trust or distrust in a way that is extremely biased, things can go very wrong. Protection can be used correctly or incorrectly. There really isn't any in between. If someone uses protection correctly, no one but threats will get hurt. If it is used incorrectly, things can go terribly wrong.

_____Noun_____ is a lion with a story. He was abandoned by _____Proper Noun_____ mother almost directly after birth. One reason Rocky's _____Adjective_____ mother abandoned him may have been because she sensed an extreme amount of overprotection in him and thought it would be a bad thing in the future. Ben was the boy who _____Verb - Past Tense_____ Rocky, _____Verb - Past Tense_____ him, _____Verb - Past Tense_____ him what to do, _____Conjunction_____ made sure he fit in with all the other lions. If it weren't for Ben, Rocky may not even be alive. Because of everything Ben did for Rocky, everyone near _____Proper Noun_____ may be in extreme danger. Ben was the first human Rocky ever knew, so he may now be loyal to Ben, and only Ben.

Distrusting the neighbors of Los Coyotes is a very important part of the murders of Daisy and Helen. Since the neighbors are distrusted, they are suspects in the case, yet _____Proper Noun - Plural_____ may be innocent. Another reason distrust is even stronger than trust is because the distrust of the _____Noun - Plural_____ near Los Coyotes could lead to false accusations, which could lead to the disposal of the big cats of Los Coyotes. REALLY?! I don't think people should use distrusts or biases at all. What will it take for people in this world to get over biases and distrusts that could lead to unjust acts.
