The Bullfighter

Once upon a           Noun          , far far away in the country of Spain, there was a           Adjective           soon to be bullfighter. He was known by the name of Seor           Name           and he lived in a small           Noun           hut with his Great Grandmother,           Name          . They were a           Adjective           family but he dreamed of being able to support them with his cow           Verb - Present ends in ING           skills. The truth was that no one wanted his work so he was soon left jobless.

One           Adjective           afternoon, the           Adjective           sap decided to travel around into nearby towns. Having to urinate rather badly he walked into a nearby           Adjective           shop. Emerging out of the lavatory,           Name          , the store owner, burst out with a           Adjective           enthusiastic proposal to travel to Pamplona the upcoming week and take part in the festivities.

Exactly 9 days later, the Seor set out on his journey, Traveling from           Country           in the south of Spain, all the way up to the Pamplona in the north. Upon arrival he walked into the nearest           Noun           shop and asked the           Adjective           man to call for a cab. When the cabbie arrived he directed           Name           to 153           Proper Noun           Road.

This was where he met           Name           and just as any man would, he tried his best to impress her. She was interested in the men that took part in the festivities such as the bullfighting event. This is what left Seor to making a life changing decision. Within the next time hours he would be a well known bullfighter.

As everyone gathered the next afternoon in the ring some Adjective power over took the moment. Seor jumped with empowerment and Verb - Past Tense to the nearest Noun. Within a breaths time he was entered into the FIGHT.

He could hear the bulls trampling through the streets and prepared himself for the worst. Ready with his Noun and horse he stood for the first impact. In a flash the horse was down and he lied Verb - Past Participle in the dirt. He Verb - Past Tense to his feet and was feeling Adjective.

The next thing the crowd saw was terrifying. A amount of swooshes of the cape and Seor was down again. The taste of blood and dirt on his Body Part and the wave of defeat. Men rushed from the sides to help but it was too late. There was final crunch and that is the last memory we have him.
