Our Nation's Capital

On a hot and _____Adjective_____ day in late May, Katie arrived in Washington, DC to visit her _____Adjective_____ and _____Adjective_____ boyfriend Eric. Although Eric was in DC for a _____Adjective_____ internship, he was more interested in _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ while Katie was there. After giving her a very _____Adjective_____ welcome, he and Katie got ready for dinner by dressing in their best _____Adjective_____ clothes.

Katie and Eric walked _____Body Part_____ in _____Body Part_____ to the Metro station, where they caught an underground _____Noun_____ into the heart of the city. They walked around looking at _____Adjective_____ monuments, and had a _____Adjective_____ dinner at a _____Adjective_____ restaurant called Old Ebbitt Grille. They sat next to some very interesting people at dinner, including a _____Adjective_____ Australian bloke and a _____Adjective_____ father who warned them against having _____Noun_____.

After dinner, the couple visited more monuments that were lit up _____Adjective_____ in the darkness. Katie was most excited to see the Lincoln Memorial, and she and Eric were a bit _____Adjective_____ to see so many people there late at night. It was a _____Adjective_____ sight, though, and Eric even ran into a fellow traveling _____Noun_____ who kindly took their _____Noun_____ in front of Honest Abe.

After a _____Adjective_____ walk back to the Metro station, Katie and Eric found themselves back in Tenleytown. They were pretty _____Adjective_____ from all the _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____, and their _____Noun_____ hurt a bit, but they were really happy to be together after weeks apart. As they snuggled in Eric's bed, he said the words that Katie had been hoping to hear for a long time: I _____Verb - Base Form_____ you.
