Day one

We all woke up at the crack of dawn, jetting from across the eastern seaboard to miami. There the eleven weary travelers met but were soon gone without a trace, except for the remnants of Lester's chicken sandwich. The flight to san jose went by quickly because we were all charged with anticipation. After a quick but indirect cab ride, we arrived at the hotel. Two parties ventured out one to go to the market, the other to watch sarah buy more comfortable walking shoes. We all met up at san jose's most tradition (or touristy) restaurant, when jessica arranged withe the waiter to bring us $350 worth of food. Then we all went back to the hotel for a major snooze fest.
