Muppets Tonight

"I know, I know." _____
First Name of a Person replied waving the hand that he was not using to keep Rex steady on his lap. "Rex, do you think that I'm crazy?"

"You really think _____
Noun I am qualified to answer that." the dummy responded while quirking an eyebrow.

Robbie smiled in _____
Noun, "I guess not." They could both see Beck's car pulling around the corner at last, so Robbie got up and started to collect their stuff. Beck pulled up in front of the house about the same time that Robbie reached the curb.

"What is Jade doing here?" The shocked ventriloquist asked. For there she sat in the passenger seat in all her angry-at-the-universe punk-goth glory. She had only ever tolerated Robbie and had been avoiding spending too much time with Beck since their break-up.

Jade rolled her eyes, "Please Shapiro if you're loosing it, I want a front row seat. "

"Forget the plane; if the Wicked Witch is coming we can just fly Air Tornado." Rex mocked.

"You want a front row seat to the airport?" Robbie was stilled confused.

"Nope," Beck answered. "She's coming with us to Canada."

"Us?"

"Robbie, I don't care if you're crazy or not." Beck explained, "If this stuff is as serious as you say it is you do not want to be going through this alone. So I decided to come with you. Jade caught me ditching school, forced me to tell her and now she agrees that you need moral support."

"I did not SAY that!" she protested.

"It was subtext." Beck acquiesced. "Very, very sub-text, so call your Grandma and make sure that she's cool with two more."
