More stories at WordBlanks.com

The Great Geology Field Trip

1. Noun _____
2. Adverb _____

The Great Geology Field Trip

Once upon a time, 14 students from Wayland Baptist University embarked on a geology field trip to central _____Noun_____. During their trip, they encountered many dangerous natural disasters. When the geology team left Plainview, Texas, a large earthquake shook the ground and made huge fractures in the landscape. Their leader, David Schmidt, drove through all the destruction, _____Adverb_____. Hours later when they made it to Oklahoma, a large sinkhole opened and consumed the entire highway. Their fearless leader drove around the big hole in the ground, and kept everyone safe. When they reached Arkansas it was raining. It rained so much that it began to flood. Large rivers were flooding towns and cities, but the Wayland geology team drove around all the destruction and drove to higher ground. They reached a place called Petit Jean State Park. There at Petit Jean, they looked at a beautiful waterfall and spectacular rock formations. Night came and the geology team from Wayland set up their camp. The next morning, they drove to the gorgeous Ouachita Mountains. The highway meanders it's way through the mountains along steep slopes. Later that day, the geology team was approached by a large bear. It had a black furry coat, sharp teeth, and large claws. The geology team ran away screaming at the top of their lungs. They ran down a hill where Garrett picked up a board and started swinging at the bear, but the board slipped out of his hands and hit the windshield of the university van. The glass broke in the windshield and rain was getting inside the van. Several of the students were confused and didn't know what to do. So, they started picking up rocks to through at the charging bear. One student, Aaron, thought they picked up a rock but realized they picked up horse poop. He immediately dropped the poop and started to run. Finally, they out ran the bear and it was night time.

©2026 WordBlanks.com · All Rights Reserved.