activities that boast skills and development

Who knew? Sometimes it's the simplest and toys that teach the biggest lessons. Take , for example. Hide your face behind your hands, say "peekaboo!" in a silly voice, and you're not only your baby's first giggles, but you're also helping him grasp "object permanence." Your baby's has moved on from "out of sight, out of mind" thinking into knowing that your face (or a toy under a blanket) doesn't disappear forever when it's out of view.
You can start helping your little one learn brain-boosting (and skill-building) lessons from the get-go. Provide him with he can focus his vision on and practice verb - Present Tense with his eyes: A mobile hanging from his crib, a board filled with simple illustrations or of everyday objects, or a brightly colored But his brain isn't the only part of the body that needs boosting. You can also try different bodybuilding (baby-style) activities to build up his muscles, both large and small his arms and legs and strengthen the muscles he'll need for all the physical Noun - ahead of him (sitting up!!). Or play some patty-cake so he can sharpen his dexterity (the better to pick up thoseProper Noun - Plural!).
