In Sicily

In the afternoon Douglas drove us to a _____Noun_____ _____Preposition_____ _____Noun_____ a _____Adjective_____ _____Noun_____ from whose _____Adjective_____ walls the Greeks had _____Verb - Past Tense_____ the stones to build their _____Adjective_____ city. The water was _____Adjective_____ and a _____Adjective_____ breeze kept it _____Adjective_____. Patti _____Verb - Past Tense_____ me her goggles and I managed to work out a way that I could perch on submerged rocks and watch the fish without getting water in my eardrum. I saw three kinds of fish--roundish flat silver ones with a black stripe at the top of their tails like the one Patti had fixed for supper, long slender ones with a brilliant collection of colors that did not seem to correspond with the colors of this world--blue, yellow, red are as close as I can come, but they were like jeweled neon. And there were little fish like tubes that were mainly a greeny-yellow encircled with stripes of dark. I looked and looked and looked, floating with the waves, waving my arms gently to keep me in place.
