Young Lovers

Once upon a Noun there were two young Noun - Plural who were forced to spend Number months apart. Although Adjective advances allowed them to stay in contact, Noun - Plural and Proper Noun calls were never enough. They would often spend Number or more hours staring into each others' Noun - Plural through the Verb - Present ends in ING screens of their computers. When the internet connection was Adjective, the young lovers were forced to look at Adjective images and to try to decipher fragments of Noun - Plural, often lost in the Adjective Noun. Life was Adjective and, as Noun turned to Noun, the lovers grew Adjective and the need for Noun Verb - Past Participle fiercely in their Adjective regions. One day, during the beginning of what looked to be a Adjective, Adjective, winter, the lovers' fate was changed. On a Adjective December morning they were Verb - Past Participle in a Noun far away. When they saw each other for the first time the two wrapped themselves into a Adjective embrace, feeling once again like all was Adjective with the world. From that day forward, the two were Adjective. They Verb - Past Tense, they Verb - Past Tense, they Verb - Past Tense, and spent a great deal of time Verb - Past Participle around each other in a Adjective Noun. There was so much Verb - Present ends in ING and Verb - Present ends in ING that they forgot what it was like to feel Adverb and far away. When the time came for the two to part ways, they Verb - Past Tense that it would only be Adjective and would never last as long ever again.
