You don't have to feed everyone a huge meal. Serve light food. If you tell everyone in advance to expect drinks and light snacks, that's all people will expect. Or time the party right: mid- to late-afternoon or after dinner, when everyone has already eaten a major meal.

The holidays are really about getting together and spending time with people. You don't need to spend extravagantly to have a holiday party that everyone will enjoy. What people will take away from the holidays is not a magnificent centerpiece or a full bar. What they'll take away are the great times they had. Put your focus on helping your friends, family, co-workers and employees have fun. Take the focus off extravagance. You'll be surprised how little people will miss the latter when you provide the former.
