Patrick Henry's Speech

No man thinks more highly than I do of the, as well as abilities, of the very worthy gentlemen who have just addressed the House. But different men often see the same subject in different ; and, therefore, I hope it will not be thought disrespectful to those gentlemen if, entertaining as I do, opinions of a character very to theirs, I shall speak forth my freely, and without reserve. This is no time for ceremony. The question before the House is one of awful moment to this country.
For my own part, I consider it as nothing less than a question of freedom or; and in proportion to the magnitude of the subject ought to be the freedom of the debate. It is only in this way that we can to arrive at truth, and fulfil the great responsibility which we hold to God and our country. Should I keep back my at such a time, through fear of giving offence, I should consider myself as guilty of treason towards my country, and of an act of toward the majesty of heaven, which I above all earthly kings.
