Eton's Math Lib

This story shows how _____Adjective_____ Einstein could be. Not long after his arrival in _____Proper Noun_____ he was invited, by the wife of one of the _____Noun - Plural_____ of mathematics at Princeton, to be guest of honor at a tea party.-Reluctantly, Einstein consented. After the tea had progressed for a time, the excited hostess, _____Pronoun_____ to have such an eminent guest of honor, fluttered out into the center of activity and with raised _____Noun - Plural_____ silenced the group. Bubbling out some words expressing her _____Noun_____ and pleasure, she turned to Einstein and said: "I wonder, _____Proper Noun_____. Einstein, if you would be so kind as to explain to my guests in a few words, just what is relativity theory ? "

Without any hesitation Einstein rose to his _____Verb - Past Tense_____ and told a story. He said he was reminded of a walk he one day had with his blind friend. The day was _____Adjective_____ and he turned to the blind friend and said, "I wish I had a glass of milk."

"Glass," replied the blind friend, "I know what that is. But what do you mean by milk?"

"Why, milk is a white _____Verb - Past Tense_____," explained Einstein.

"Now _____Pronoun_____, I know what that is," said the blind man. "but what is white ? "

" Oh, white is the color of a swan's feathers."

" _____Verb - Non 3rd Person Singular Present_____, now I know what they are, but what is a swan ? "

"A _____Determiner_____ is a bird with a crooked neck."

" Neck, I know what that is, but what do you mean by crooked ? "

At this point Einstein said he lost his patience. He seized his blind friend's arm and pulled it straight. "There, now your arm is straight," he said. Then he bent the blind friend's arm at the elbow. "Now it is crooked."

"Ah," said the blind friend. "Now I know what milk is."

And Einstein, at the tea, sat down.
