Doctor Who

While visiting the crystalline resort planet _____Proper Noun_____, the exposed surface of which is bathed in lethal _____Adjective_____ radiation due to its close orbit around its star, the Doctor is unable to persuade _____Proper Noun_____ to join him on a long _____Noun_____ trip to see the _____Proper Noun_____ Waterfall. The Doctor joins the other passengers on the shuttle; Professor _____Proper Noun_____ and his assistant _____Proper Noun_____ Dee, the _____Proper Noun_____ family (_____Proper Noun_____, _____Proper Noun_____, and _____Proper Noun_____), and businesswoman _____Noun_____ _____Noun_____. Upon departure of the shuttle, the hostess attempts to start a cacophony of en route entertainment; the Doctor disables the entertainment system, and the rest of the passengers readily join him in casual conversation.

The shuttle cruiser unexpectedly stops mid-route, which the pilot suggests is caused by a problem with the micro-petrol engines, and he issues a request for help. The Doctor suggests they raise the _____Noun_____ shields briefly to take a look at the view, and as they close the shields, the technician claims to have spotted something moving outside. Soon, a rhythmic knocking starts on the hull of the shuttle, which then mimicks the sound patterns which the passengers make on the walls. The knocking moves around the hull, to where Sky is cowering ; the shuttle is rocked briefly, causing the _____Noun - Plural_____ to fail. The hostess opens the captains cabin to find it have been ripped apart from the rest of the _____Noun_____. The Doctor finds out that something has sliced it off, killing the diver and mechanic inside of it.

The

Doctor talks to _____Coordinating conjunction_____, but she appears able only to repeat the words he or the other passengers say. However, as they talk to her more, the delay in her repetition decreases, to the extent that she eventually speaks at the same time as the other passengers. The other passengers become increasingly afraid of what has possessed _____Proper Noun_____, and they start plotting to throw her out of the shuttle. The Doctor strongly opposes the idea, and the passengers begin to accuse the Doctor, distrusting him for not revealing who he truly is. The Doctor realises that _____Noun_____ is now repeating only his words, and turns back to _____Proper Noun_____ to try to help her, staring at her face to face. After some exchange, the other passengers observe Sky now stating her sentences before the Doctor repeats them after a short delay, and they believe that the possession has moved onto the Doctor. Though _____Proper Noun_____ tries to encourage the other passengers to throw the Doctor out of one of the airlocks, the hostess, _____Proper Noun_____ Dee, and later _____Adverb_____, believe this to be the next stage of _____Proper Noun_____ possession. When Sky uses words and phrases that the Doctor used at the start of the trip, the hostess realises that _____Noun_____ is still possessed and drags her out of the other airlock, sacrificing herself in the process. With _____Noun_____ gone, the Doctor regains his normal self, while the other passengers come to grips with what happened. As they wait for rescue, the Doctor realises that no one knew the hostess's name.

At the spa, a mournful Doctor is reunited with _____Proper Noun_____. When _____Adverb_____ repeats one of the Doctor's phrases, he quickly asks her not to.
