

Things you should know about cloth diapers

1. Noun
2. Verb - Past Tense
3. Verb - Past Tense
4. Noun

Things you should know about cloth diapers

How I was going to the store and found Myth #1 - Cloth Diapers Are Expensive

It is estimated that using disposable diapers can cost you between two and three thousand dollars per child, from birth to potty training. That is an astounding amount of money to spend on what is essentially garbage.

_____ Noun _____ diapers, however, are much cheaper in the long run, even if the initial investment is more.

Assuming that you will not be sewing your own diapers, it is entirely possible to cloth diaper a child for 3 years for $100-300 dollars. These diapers will likely last for one or more subsequent children as well. Do the _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ numbers don't lie.

Myth #2 - Cloth Diapers Smell

Cloth diapers do not smell any more than a _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ diaper does. The smell that emanates from a cloth diaper thrown in a diaper pail can not be more offensive than a soiled disposable diaper thrown in a garbage can. Innovative new diaper pails and odor controlling _____ Noun _____ in a variety of sweet smelling fragrances have eliminated this problem entirely. Odors are also held at bay by using a dry pail method for storing soiled diapers so that the diapers are not left to sit in stagnant and possibly malodorous water. With these new advances, there are no reasons why cloth diapers need to "smell".