Discovering Baby

It was a _____ Adjective July Sunday morning. The night before, May had had two interesting . In the first dream, she was walking along a path with her friend who was heavily pregnant at that time. In the dream, she was talking to her friend and asking about her pregnancy. As soon as that dream was over, May had her second dream. In her second dream, she was in a lovely field where the sun was gently beating down on her back. She felt the slight sway of the wind and was drinking in the beautiful day. While drinking in the beautiful weather, she picked a large, deep red strawberry. It was the perfect strawberry. The color was deep, the shape was the epitome of a perfect strawberry, and the glossiness of the strawberry was startlingly. She held it in her hands and looked at it, marveling at the perfection of the strawberry. While looking, she woke up.

After she woke up, she scratched her head and thought, "That's strange." Not thinking much of it, she shrugged her shoulders and decided to get ready for church. While getting ready, she told her husband about her dreams. Her husband asked, "Are you pregnant?" Many Koreans have a "pregnancy dream," which is why he asked if she were pregnant. May, being dubious of that possibility, answered, "Huh? I don't know?!" Nonetheless, the two dreams she had vividly stayed in her mind.

Out of curiosity, she decided to try taking a pregnancy test. As she expected, the test came out negative. Despite the fact that it came out negative, her curiosity took hold of her once again one or two days afterwards.

Expecting a negative, she was quite startled when it came out...POSITIVE. Thinking to herself that it could not possibly be true, she saved that test and put it somewhere no could find. Her heart was racing and mind was going crazy.

The next morning, she secretly took another test. Again, the test came out positive. At this point, May was speechless and did not know what to think. She decided to email her doctor. The doctor replied back telling her to wait a couple more weeks. A couple more weeks?! Although the two pregnancy tests had shown positive, May was still in denial. Hence, she secretly purchased several more tests. As she took them in the evening, afternoon, and morning, every single one of the 9 tests she took came out positive. Because she had tried out three different brands, she could not deny the fact that this had to be true.

May felt giddy, excited, nervous, and joyous. She wanted to tell her husband, for she knew he would be ecstatic. However, she did not want to tell him IN CASE she were not pregnant. Nonetheless, she decided to go ahead and let him know. Suddenly feeling a bit shy, she decided to make her "announcement" by placing all of the positive pregnancy tests on the bathroom counter. As her husband was taking a shower, she told him that she would quickly go to the market to purchase something and shortly return. When she came back, her husband did not say anything to her. Hence, she thought that he had not seen it. When she inquired, he replied with a huge smile.

A couple of weeks later, when she went to the nurse's clinic to check, the nurse greeted May and her husband with a big smile and a "congratulations!"
