Mrs. Emu's Feather Boa

It was a warm spring evening in Tully and there was excitement in the air. Tonight was the annual Bush Dance and everyone in town was going.

Mrs. Emu was especially excited. This year she was going to have the special honour of singing the first song of the evening with the famous Tully Tunes Big Band. She had been _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ every day for a month and now she was ready.

She went to her bedroom to get dressed. Her costume was an _____Adjective_____ black dress and a _____Adjective_____ red feather boa. She loved her feather boa. It was rose red, long and full of feathers! She was going to look _____Adjective_____ up on the stage, singing and _____Verb - Present ends in ING_____ and...

Oh no! Her feather boa! It was gone!

She looked in the wardrobe. She looked under the _____Noun_____. She even looked in the _____Noun_____ and the _____Noun_____, but she couldn't find it anywhere. She ran into the living room and asked Mr. Emu,

"Have you seen my feather boa? I can't find it anywhere!"

Mr. Emu was watching the footie on the _____Noun_____.

"No," he said. "I haven't seen it."

Mrs. Emu started to panic. She ran to the dance hall.

"Hello boys!," she said to the Tully Tunes Big Band. They were getting ready for the concert too. "Have you seen my feather boa?"

"No," said Percy Possum.

"I haven't seen it," said William Wallaby.

"Sorry," said Kev Koala. "I don't know where it is."

"What am I going to do!" cried Mrs. Emu. "Without my feather boa my costume will be so boring."

"Maybe, I can help", said Cas the Carpet Snake.

The

other animals looked confused. It was very unusual for Cas to be friendly or helpful.

"Really?" asked Mrs. Emu. "How?"

"Well, I may not be red and fluffy, but I am very long and my _____Noun_____ are shiny. Let me be your boa for this evening."

Mrs. Emu thought about this for a moment.

"Well, it would _____Adverb_____ be an interesting costume, but I'm not sure..."

Should Mrs. Emu wear Cas the Carpet Snake instead of her feather boa?
