The Carnival

Finally, one evening we saw it, the carnival we'd driven hundreds of miles to find. We found it in an _____ Adjective _____ meadow only a few miles out of Baton Rouge. It was in full swing, _____ Adjective _____ with hundreds of colored light bulbs, noisy with the shouting of carnival workers and the laughter of children and the _____ Adjective _____ music of a merry-go-round at the center. There was a Ferris wheel too, with a few children strapped to the seats, and on a _____ Adjective _____ track there was a ride with six little cars which looked like a _____ Adjective _____ caterpillar. There were wheels with _____ Adjective _____ _____ Adjective _____ prizes attached-- chewing gum, candy bars, sometimes a quarter or a half dollar. There were tents where carnival workers urged us to have our fortunes told. We were invited to see the _____ Adjective _____ lady, a man with flippers instead of arms, a _____ Adjective _____ man from the jungles of Borneo. We passed shooting galleries and booths where the prizes for knocking down a _____ Adjective _____ dummy were _____ Adjective _____ dolls with _____ Adjective _____ painted eyes or net stockings filled with candy.
