

Once Upon A Time...

1. Adjective
2. Adjective
3. Adjective
4. Adjective
5. Adjective
6. Adjective
7. Adjective
8. Adjective
9. Adjective
10. Adjective
11. Adjective
12. Adjective
13. Adjective
14. Adjective
15. Adjective
16. Adjective
17. Adjective
18. Adjective
19. Adjective
20. Adjective
21. Adjective
22. Adjective
23. Adjective

24. Adjective

25. Adjective

26. Adjective

27. Adjective

28. Adjective

29. Adjective

30. Adjective

31. Adjective

32. Adjective

33. Adjective

34. Adjective

35. Adjective

36. Adjective

37. Adjective

38. Adjective

39. Adjective

40. Adjective

Once Upon A Time...

Once upon a time there were some Adjective goblins living playfully at a Adjective farm.

Adjective goblins as they were, they would often help out without the Adjective farmer or his Adjective wife noticing them. They would only do so if they were given a Adjective bowl of Adjective porridge on the Yule* evening of every year, however.

One year, the farmer's Adjective son and his rather Adjective family were there for Yule celebration, and the son's Adjective wife told her Adjective daughter to put the porridge secretly in the barn, but she tripped and fell deeply on the way there. Adjective as she was, she didn't want to tell her mother, so she forcefully brought the family's Adjective dog and accidentally made him clean up the mess, then put the Adjective bowl in the barn.

When the goblins found it, they were Adjective. To avenge this, the Adjective goblin Adjective in the Adjective milk tank, and the others ran unilaterally to the basement of the house and pulled out all the Adjective electrical devices, then rudely cut the power supply. They let loose the sheep and the cows, and screwed the wheels off of the farmer's Adjective car and his son's Adjective one.

The humans had a Adjective time gathering the Adjective herd, the goblins mistakenly went into the the house to eat the humans' porridge. When the humans came back in, the Adjective daughter gently told them what had happened. From his Adjective hole in the attic, the attic goblin heard what they said, and when the humans, still without electricity, went to bed, he skilfully sneaked out in the barn and told the Adjective goblins there. They were so messy that they decided to fix everything and leave the farm . The _____ Adjective _____ farmer was gross when nobody ate the porridge he put in the barn the following years.

The goblins left for the _____ Adjective _____, _____ Adjective _____ forest surrounding the farm. There, they planned to live with the wood goblins. Living in the woods wasn't for them, though. They found it anxious, in fact. It was so puristic to have snow everywhere. They froze so much that they decided to ask the _____ Adjective _____ wood goblin elder for advice. He told them to return to the farm before ending up _____ Adjective _____. They were too _____ Adjective _____, however, and even though the ice started growing from their _____ Adjective _____ noses, they ventured into the _____ Adjective _____ mountains to try their luck with the mountain and cave goblins, whom most goblins thought were crazy.

Although the caves suited them , they felt giant there. Something lacked in their life. They did, after _____ Adjective _____ years, admit that the wood goblin elder was conscious. They returned to the _____ Adjective _____ farm, but to their surprise, another goblin family had moved in. They were ferocious, and the goblins fought each other for the right to the farm. The _____ Adjective _____ goblins won their _____ Adjective _____ home back, and the _____ Adjective _____ ones had to move. They were now lame, and intended to stay. All of them agreed that it had been a precise experience, and quickly went to sleep in their now _____ Adjective _____ barn.