My Bizarre Friends

It's probably a Adjective statement to say that every Noun has his or her own Noun - Plural, but I have to say that my friends are probably more Adjective than most people.

For example, my friend Name has an unhealthy obsession with Noun - Plural. Day in and day out

, he'll be Verb - Present ends in ING away on his Noun - Plural and Noun - Plural, and has very little time to spend with Noun - Plural.

On a related note, Name spends all of his/her waking hours Verb - Present ends in ING

Noun - Plural. His favorite game is Noun - Plural of Noun - Plural, but as long as he can find some way to Verb - Base Form a bunch of Noun - Plural and Noun - Plural, he's happy.

my buddy from college, Name, is a big fan of college football. Because she went to college in Place, he/she is what's known as a Noun Noun. If a Noun is Verb -

Present ends in ING on TV, she has to stop everything right then and there to Verb - Base Form.

Finally, there's my best friend of all. His real name is Matthew but his nickname is "Noun" because he likes to take in Verb - Past Tense and Verb - Past Tense Noun - Plural. I guess that isn't too strange, except for the fact that he now has number Noun - Plural in his Adjective

Noun

So, those are my bizarre friends in a nutshell. Like I said, everyone has his or her own quirks. People would probably find it odd that I _____ Verb - Base Form and _____ Verb - Base Form _____ Noun - Plural for a living. In closing, the most poignant thing I can say is that no _____ Noun is _____ Adjective.
