How we Met, by Michael Rowden

Michael remembers a Adjective blonde walking down the stairs at a mutual friend's Christmas party and absolutely lighting up the room. He could not take his eyes off of her and knew he had to talk to her and get her Noun. This would be no easy task since he was wearing a Adjective silk tie with a giant cartoon Santa face on the front of it. He sure looked Adjective. They hit it off right away though and talked for hours. That night they talked about their families, values, interests, and hopes for the Noun. Pretty intense stuff for just meeting but it felt Adjective the entire time. Michael left the party with his friends but could not stop thinking about Noun. Due to an unfortunate logistical situation he found himself Verb - Present Tense in the trunk of a minivan cab, from which he shamelessly and only half-jokingly declared to his friends "I think I'm in Noun!". His instincts were correct. The two of them continued to Noun each other the rest of the night. After the party Michael went to his friend Chris's apartment to play video games. His friend Chris yelled at him because he kept Verb - Present Tense and making their team Verb in Call of Duty due to his frequent texting breaks right in the middle of the game. Little did Michael and Elizabeth know, that fateful night would lead to a Noun together.
