The Cask of Amontillado

This is the story of Montressor. He was once a member of the _____Noun_____ before being trapped in the _____Noun_____ by a vengeful Fortunato. As the dark days slowly dwindle by, Fortunato, starving and lonely, vividly remembers the night he fell from grace; Montressor, donning a black _____Noun_____ and lighting a _____Noun_____, had led him, Fortunato, down into the _____Noun_____, where Montressor stowed him his most prized _____Noun_____ of Amontillado. A natural wine _____Noun_____, it only made sense for Montressor to ask Fortunato to taste-test his wine. And why should Fortunato think Montressor was up to any funny business? Like Fortunato himself, Montressor owned a trowel, which made him a _____Noun_____, too. But, alas - Montressor had deceived Fortunato; it was all a plan to get Fortunato into the cellar so Montressor could bury him alive. Such a _____Adjective_____ fate! Up until now, Fortunato always thought himself to be godlike, but now...now, as he stands tethered to a wall, he sees himself as nothing but a mere _____Noun_____.
