The Golden Rascals

"Sir, look out!" Chris yelled. Lillian _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ around in time to throw up her forcefield, stopping the huge, _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ in its tracks. It bounced off of the shield and _____ Verb - Past Tense _____, stunned for the moment. Chris took the opportunity to leap onto its _____ Part of Body _____ and catch it around the neck, bringing it to its knees. "Ally!" he called.

Alejandro pulled a long _____ Noun _____ from a well-worn copy of "Tales of King Arthur" and took a running leap at the creature. Just before he plunged the _____ Noun _____ into its _____ Part of Body _____, Chris _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ off, giving Alejandro full access. The creature _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ in pain, then slumped over, dead.

"Not bad," Lillian commented, brushing off her _____ Noun - Plural _____. "But we really must start questioning Marconi more _____ Adverb _____ when he sends us off on these mad _____ Noun - Plural _____."

Alejandro removed his _____ Noun _____ from the beast's gut and wiped it on its fur. "But I still don't understand," he mused. "What on earth could have caused this thing to attack these _____ Noun - Plural _____? They didn't hunt it; it didn't eat them. Why did it bother?"

"Some _____ Noun - Plural _____ are just pure evil," Lillian said, _____ Verb - Present ends in ING _____.

But

Chris's assessment was less Adjective. "Could it perhaps have been Verb - Present ends in ING something?" he asked, pointing to the cave whence the beast had come. "If it felt Adjective, it may have been acting on a kind of 'it's me or them' instinct. As if on cue, a low keen issued from within the Noun.

The Rascals exchanged nervous Noun - Plural, then carefully crept inside.

They hadn't gone far when, sure enough, they found a nest made of Noun - Plural, strips of Noun, and Noun - Plural - and in the middle of it was a small, Adjective animal, crying for its mother.

When the baby caught sight of them, its croons grew louder.

Lillian Verb - Past Tense. "Well that makes me feel like a Noun," she said. "What do you reckon we should -" She stopped when she saw the look on Chris's face. "Oh no," she said. "No, Chris, we are not Verb - Present Tense it."

Chris practically had stars in his Part of Body. "Oh but Sir, look at it," he cooed, Verb - Present ends in ING next to the nest and scratching the creature's Noun. It Verb - Past Tense happily at him. "

And we've just killed its mother, after all. It's the least we can do."

Lillian looked to Alejandro for support, but he only Verb - Past Tense. "So long as he keeps it away from my books..." he said.
