Visiting Washington D.C. and New York City is the Adjective of a life time. I just happened to be one of those lucky people who was fortunate enough to go there. I had this opportunity through a trip sponsored by my school. In Washington D.C., the highlights included many memorials and historical Adverb in Washington D.C. In New York I went to a Broadway show, went on many tours and had a magnificent view of New York at night on the top of Rockefeller center.

The first place we visited was our nation capitol Washington D.C. We got to go to the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial. The Washington monument was so tall that it appeared as though it could have Noun - Plural the clouds. The Lincoln Memorial was very impressive. It was so beautiful from the outside and the inside was visually amazing. I will never forget the huge statue of Lincoln in the middle of the monument. Verb - Past Tense place we visited in D.C. was the National Archives. There, we got to see the original Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the The Declaration of Independence. These pieces of our nation's history were incredible to see in person. We also visited Verb - Present ends in S National Cemetery. We witnessed the changing of the guard of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. It was a very interesting show. The people who were in it were actually just doing there job and they Verb - Base Form actors. They took the responsibility very seriously which made it meaningful. Another place we visited in D.C. was the Holocaust Museum. This museum meant a lot to me and I'm sure it did the same to others. It was a very touching experience for me to see all of those pictures and videos of real life Proper Noun that before, I couldn't even imagine happening. It was really like the event was brought to life. We also visited the Smithsonian Museum.

We got to see many famous artifacts like Abe Lincoln's hat and Mr. Rodgers sweater.
