Star Trek Mashup

Captain Picard adjusted the Adjective hem of his uniform sweater as he stepped out of the Turbolift and onto the bridge of the Enterprise. His Klingon security officer, Rank First Name of a Person, stood scowling over his work station. As he rounded the rear section of the bridge he passed an anonymous-looking ensign who never said anything and always stood facing the wall, idly tapping buttons for the duration of his shift. When he reached the elaborate structure in the middle of the floor that housed the three command seats, he gazed about himself with a smug grin. This was where the magic happened.

"Captain," his first officer said, rising from his Noun with a nod. Commander William Riker was Picard's most trusted officer. Riker had made a career out of tugging at the hem of his sweater and saying, "Shields up! Red alert!" Off-duty, he was a notorious ladykiller.

"Number one, we've just received orders to investigate an anomaly in the neutral zone. It seems there are unexplained bursts of energy in the area, and Starfleet Command wants us to make a scientific survey of the region."
