Parallel Structure is Awesome

Parallel structure is _____ Adjective for your _____ Noun because it adds clarity, focus and _____ Adjective _____ to your writing. If you feel like your _____ Noun could use some flair to _____ Verb - Base Form up its otherwise _____ Adjective ideas, then using parallel structure can be an _____ Adjective way of making you sound not informed, but _____ Noun. In fact, we use parallel structure in our _____ Verb - Present ends in ING all the time without even knowing it. When you write a thesis statement which lists the ideas that you plan to address subsequently in your paper, the process you're engaging in is parallel structure. It's a practice that is effective on the word, sentence, clause and even paragraph level. It's helpful to become acquainted with this practice early in your college career, so that it becomes almost second nature. Your reader will appreciate it, and you will notice that your writing will take on a professional voice. Structuring your thoughts can be a challenging endeavor, but by engaging in parallelism, your thoughts can almost magically begin to structure themselves.
