Poppy

"While other young yordle girls played skip-step and braided wreathes out of posies, Poppy spent her youth earning _____ Noun - Plural and grease stains in her father's armor shop.

Blomgrun, her father, was Bandle City's finest smith. The only thing he loved as much as his work was his _____ Adjective daughter, _____ Proper Noun - named for the sprightly sounds of the sparks that leapt from his ever-burning forge. He swelled with pride the day she was first able to lift his trusty hammer, Whomper. _____ Proper Noun immediately took to his art, demonstrating a natural gift for smithing, which Blomgrun honed with devoted instruction.

One day, a Demacian general named _____ Verb - Past Tense Berell commissioned Blomgrun to craft a helm, glorious beyond comparison. Blomgrun toiled away on this project, determined to present Florin with his finest work. He let Poppy set the center jewel, entrusting her with the most important _____ Noun.

When the pair finished, they departed for Demacia to deliver it in person.

Word of the general's order, however, was leaked to the Noxian High Command, and two Noxian assassins were dispatched to intercept the delivery. Blomgrun was able to occupy the assassins long enough for Poppy to escape with the prized helm. She watched helplessly from the brush as her father was slain. Instead of fleeing home, she carried the helm the rest of the way to Demacia alone. She refused payment for it, saying that no amount would compensate for her father's life. Instead, she offered it as _____ Determiner gift, honoring her father's final intentions. Florin saw the grim determination behind the tears in her eyes, and requested that the leadership of Bandle City appoint Proper Noun as the yordle ambassador to Demacia.

Soon after, seeking to crush Noxus with her father's hammer, Verb - Past Tense volunteered for the League of Legends.
