Heart of Darkness Mad Lib

He was an	Verb - Past Participle	Noun	; he could fi	re up a vertic	al boiler. He	e was there below	w me, and, upon my	word, to look at him	was as edifying	as seeing a	Noun	_ in a parod	y of breeches ar	ıd a feather hat, w	alking on his hind-leg	s. A few months	s of training	had done for	that really f	fine chap. He sq	uinted at the steam-gau	ge and at the water-ga	nuge with an evi	dent effort o	of intrepidity-	-and he had	filed teeth, too,	the Adjective	, Noun , ar	nd the wool of h	is pate shav	ed into queer	patterns, an	d three ornamer	ital scars on each of his	cheeks. He ought to h	nave been clapp	ing his hand	ls and stampi	ng his feet o	n the bank, inste	ead of which he was	hard at work, a	Noun to stra	nge witchcr	aft, full of im	proving kno	owledge. He was	3 Adjective	because he had be	een Verb - Pas	t Participle	_; and what h	e knew was	thisthat should	l the water in that t	ransparent thing disap	ppear, the	Adjective	Noun	_ inside the	boiler would ge	t angry through the gr	reatness of his thirst, a	nd take a terribl	le vengeance	e. So he swea	ted and fired	d up and watche	d the glassAdv	werb (with an impr	omptu charm, n	nade of rags	, tied to his a	rm, and a pi	ece of polished	oone, as big as a watch	n, stuck flatways throu	gh his lower lip), while the	wooded bank	ks slipped pa	ast us slowly, the	short noise was left	behind, the intermina	ble miles of sile	enceand w	e crept on, to	wards Kurtz	. But the snags v	vere thick, the wate	er was treacherous and	d shallow, the bo	oiler seemed	l indeed to ha	ive a	d iective
Noun	_ in it, and thus neithe	r that fireman n	or I had any	time to peer	into our	Adjective
