Neoliberal Mad Libs

As you would expect from a philosophy, neoliberalism has answers to stereotypical philosophical questions such as "Why are we here" and "What should I do?". We are here for the and you should Humans exist for the market, and not the other way around: certainly in the sense that it is to participate in the market, and that those who do not participate have in some way. In personal ethics, the general neoliberal vision is that every human being is an entrepreneur verb - Present Tense their own life, and should act as such. Moral philosophers call this a virtue, where human beings compare their actions to the way an ideal type would act - in this case the ideal Individuals who choose their friends, hobbies, sports, and partners, to maximise their status with future employers, are This attitude - not unusual amongAdjective students - is unknown in any pre-existing moral philosophy, and is absent from early liberalism. Such social actions are not necessarily monetarised, but they represent an of the market principle into non-economic area of life - again for neoliberalism.
