I like myself, but...

When I was smaller I could entertain _____Pronoun_____ for hours because I was my favorite person to spend time with. It didn't matter if grown ups weren't around or if other kids couldn't play with me, because I knew that I was my own best friend.

As time went on, I started to learn that it is important to be liked by other people, but no one ever told me exactly what that meant. I started to gather clues, from television and from gossip at school.

I started to feel like there was no way I could be all of the things that I thought I needed to be in order to be liked
