Forlorn Hope

Anna's thoughts were of a Adjective - Comparative time as a little Noun. She must have been four or five years old. Her Proper Noun would take her to a local Noun and stand at the base of the slide waiting to catch her in his Noun - Plural. It was one of her favorite Noun - Plural with her father. The first time she Verb - Past Tense the six feet to the top of the slide she was Verb - Past Participle. She had Verb - Past Participle on her father's Noun - Plural before and they lived in a two-story house, but the slide was higher than she had ever been without Noun or her Noun to keep her Adjective.

She believed in her father implicitly. Verb - Past Participle by her father's Noun - Plural, she took the Noun. She felt the cold metal slide against her back - acceleration into those waiting Noun - Plural. The fear of the situation faded as she performed this daring feat of Noun again and again.

Squeals of excitement escaped her lips - her father grinned at the bottom, sometimes roaring with laughter. She knew she was safe cradled in his Noun - Plural or walking hand in hand back to the Noun. Life was simpler then - Daddy was there to Verb her.
