"I am a weapon."

Her expression became adamant and Adjective. "So am I." Her Noun was firm and loud enough to fill the Noun. "And I am tired of it not Verb - Present ends in ING. Now tell me who you are."

"Is that an order?" He asked.

"Yes." And the moment she said that, she felt a very faint, cold Noun in the back of her head. It wasn't an emotion, but something about the bond itself... moving or changing... maybe just Verb - Present ends in ING.

The Rune Breaker lowered his Noun and his voice became emotionless and subdued. "Yes, Miss Taylin. The name of Rune Breaker is a pun, in your modern language, on the ancient Noun I was born with and a reference to my Noun - Plural."

He straightened up, floating off the ground again until his Noun was of a height with hers. But his eyes were still downcast. "I am the shape-shifting Noun. The arcane Noun of nations long dead.

The Noun bound by the most complex spell Noun - Plural ever devised in the history of two Noun - Plural to serve the strongest of souls.

"I am kingmaker. Noun slayer. The foundation of Noun. The destroyer of Noun - Plural and the power of ancestral gods. Use me as you will and I will rain oblivion on your enemies. Work your Noun through me and all Noun - Plural before you will be utterly decimated. Direct me in the service of your greatest desires and you will Verb - Base Form nations."

Without warning, he dropped to a knee, supported by one fist on the smooth, stone Noun. "My name is Ru Brakar. And until you Verb - Base Form your last, I am your Noun and Noun. Such was the bargain you struck and sealed in blood."
