The Night We Fell In Love

It was a and and night Or, it was a typical fall evening in October when it all began:
"Come over" she said. "Help Dad and me put some on a half-wall," she asked.
So, he naively packed a few tools, and at the end of a long day, after a week of playing, drow Number minutes to the crowded little Type of Building.
But, as carefully laid-out plans do, nothing went as expected. It was not just putting wall board on a partial Noun like the Adjective curly-haired Animal said. Oh, no! There was much Verb - Present ends in ING , designing, and Verb - Present ends in ING that needed to be done. Even then, as the evening slowly turned to night, everyone realized that just strengthening the wall above to stairwell wasn't going to be enough.
"Wait!" her dad (the unknowing chaperone) exclaimed excitedly. While raising his
, he continued, "We can support the wall with the 150-year-old porch pillar we have out in the Room of a House !" (Because, be truthful, who doesn't have one of those laying around?)

three workers diligently set out on the new path, determined to modify the old column. They spent quality time pondering and re-pondering the best and most over-built way to accomplish this! At last, they decided to the column to the half wall and tie into the roof rafters. There was a energy in the air. There was a saw to use. Dimensions were taken, checked, and re-confirmed more times. Explanations of how to use tools were patiently accepted. Politics and religion were discussed as the air shot nails into studs (the Adjective variety of course). The project moved on
As early night turned into late night, and midnight became early morning, the old Victorian column found a new home, the half wall strengthened, 2 middle-aged Animal (plural) started to fall in love.
