The Husband's Story

And I saw her look at me. She saw me Verb - Present Tense. As usual it was my first. They got long, each foot got longer, stretching out, the toes stretching out and the foot getting longer and my hair Verb - Present Tense. Soon she would realize I would not look like her Noun. Soon I would be an Noun. I would be Verb - Past Participle. My nerves began to jolt through my body.

Rapidly the hair on my body became Verb - Past Tense and disappeared into the burning. Pain ripped through each muscle, first my feet, then my legs and my face. If she only knew how much this Verb me more than it hurt her. I turned my face to look at her. I knew I was changing in front of her eyes, becoming the Adjective one. I hoped that she realized I had no control, I was Adjective to this dark of the moon. As my face became flatter and my teeth became duller, and my nose changed its shape, I began to smell things Adverb; hear things Adverb. Could we ever go back to our lives after this. I never meant for her to see me as this.

I knew it was time to Verb - Base Form. I wouldn't be as fast as them, but I had to run. I wouldn't hurt them, but I knew they couldn't Verb - Base Form that. Noun, it was the only thing we shared.

This was it, she saw me for the Noun I am. I would always love Noun, no matter how this turned out. I may be her _____, but I would always be her _____.
