EO-General

"Employee ownership" refers to the ownership of a Noun, directly or indirectly, in part or in whole by some or all of its Noun - Plural. Of course, a business owner can also be an Noun (the CEO, etc.), but that's not what we mean by employee ownership. Rather, we refer to ownership by a broad cross-section of employees, including Adjective employees, generally through a formal plan offered by the employer.

The main vehicle for broad-based ownership in the U.S. is the employee stock ownership plan (ESOP). An ESOP is a type of Noun plan that invests primarily in company Noun and holds its assets in a Noun, in accounts earmarked for employees. Plan participants do not directly own the stock and are, for the most part, paid out after they leave the company. Most ESOPs are in privately held Noun - Plural, not companies that trade on the stock markets.

The main benefit of employee ownership is that it gives employees the Noun to benefit from the value of company stock and to benefit from increases in Noun. People sometimes ask whether making a company employee-owned means that workers no longer take Noun - Plural from anyone, etc. This is untrue; a company with a stock plan still has Noun - Plural.

Companies that adopt employee ownership plans do not have to treat Noun - Plural any differently than before, but it will be to their advantage if they do. Many employee ownership companies have found, and research confirms, that a more participative approach to _____ Noun makes for a workplace that is not only more _____ Adjective but also more _____ Adjective.

Employee ownership lifts more than just company _____ Noun - Plural. It boosts the bottom line, reduces turnover and increases competitiveness. Employee ownership can _____ Verb a company, improving performance and accelerating growth. It can create a sustained competitive advantage, driving business _____ Noun that builds _____ Noun for founders, investors and employee-shareholders alike.
