Sonnet writing to Himself

Young should not write sonnets, if they dream
Some day to reach the bare seats of fame:
To such, sweet thoughts and feelings seem
As though, like foreign things, they rarely came.
Eager as when haply they have heard
Of some new songster, some gay-feathered,
That hath over blue Noun - Plural Verb - Past Tense in hope to find
In our thin foliage here a summer home
Fain would they catch the bright things in their mind,
And cage them into sonnets as they come.
No; they should serve their wants most,
Till the ripe time of song, when thoughts fail,
Then their sad sonnets, like old, might be
Adjective as youth, and yet grey-haired and hale.
