Sonnet-writing: To Himself

| Adjective men should not write genre of poetry plural, if they dream  |
|---|
| Some day to reach the bright bare seats of fame:                      |
| To such, Adjective thoughts and Adjective feelings seem               |
| As though, like foreign, they rarely came.                            |
| Eager as men when haply they have heard                               |
| Of some new songster, some gay-feathered word that rhymes with heard, |
| That hath over seas strayed in hope to find                           |
| In our thin foliage here a home                                       |
| Fain would they catch the bright things in their mind,                |
| And cage them into as they come.                                      |
| No; they should serve wants most sparingly,                           |
| Till the ripe time of song, when young thoughts fail,                 |
| Then their sad, like old bards, might be                              |
| Merry as youth, and yet grey-haired and hale.                         |
