The Day of Love

Valentine's day is a Adjective celebration each year, especially when you receive Noun and Noun - Plural from your friends. There is a lot more to this day. Did you know that Valentine's Day is actually named after a real person called St. Valentine? There are many stories and legends behind who the real St. Valentine was, but most will agree that he was a Noun, someone who Verb - Past Tense for what they believe in. Later in the Middle Ages, a great Noun named Geoffrey Chaucer wrote a poem as a present to King Proper Noun II, who was going to be married soon. In it, he mentioned St. Valentine, and over time, the idea of Valentine's Day became associated with the idea of Noun.

During the 1800's, Valentine's Day became Adjective popular! Men and women spent a lot of time making beautiful Valentine's cards with Noun, fancy Noun and even Noun. In those days, people were very reserved and they did not often say what they were feeling. Valentine's Day gave them a great way to tell their feelings to someone they were in love with anonymously. This meant that the sender would remain a mystery until they could talk to each other. Even before this time, in the late 1700s, printers would create large amounts of Valentine's Day cards so that Noun - Plural and Noun - Plural could Verb them.

In the last few decades, Valentine's day has changed a lot! Today we still exchange Noun - Plural, but many people buy cards instead of Verb - Present Tense them. We also give flowers (usually a bouquet of red roses) or chocolates as a gift to remind people of our friendship and love for them. Older couples sometimes also celebrate this day by exchanging other gifts and going out to dinner. Most Valentine's gifts and cards have the colors red and pink, and are decorated with images of _____ Noun - Plural or _____ Noun - Plural. Another common symbol of love on this day is Cupid, the Roman god of _____ Noun. He is usually shown as a little angel with a bow and arrow. According to legend, anyone who is struck by his _____ Noun - Plural will fall in _____ Noun.

Don't forget that while it is great to remind people how much you value them on Valentine's Day, it isn't the only time you should do so. You can continue doing nice things for people throughout the rest of the year too. Today, many people focus on giving _____ Noun - Plural on Valentine's Day and some people even get quite stressed out about it because they think they have to spend a lot of _____ Noun on gifts! The main thing to remember is that Valentine's Day is all about showing people that you love and appreciate them. Sometimes the best way to do this is by _____ Verb - Present Tense or _____ Verb - Present Tense something _____ Adjective for them. This is better than any _____ Noun you could ever buy at a _____ Noun!
