

Obama Gaffe

1. Adjective
2. Noun
3. Determiner
4. Coordinating Conjunction
5. Adverb
6. Verb - Base Form
7. Adjective
8. First Name Of A Person
9. Adjective
10. Adjective
11. Full Name Of A Person
12. Noun

Obama Gaffe

President Obama continues to get heat for his BuzzFeed interview, which featured him messing around with a

Adjective Noun, after it was discovered it took place in the wake of him finding out about Kayla Mueller's death at the hands of ISIS.

While hosting "America's Newsroom," Fox News anchor Heather Childers chided the president over his actions during the interview, which was released Wednesday, during a panel with Juan Williams and Mary Katharine Ham, telling the pair Obama shouldn't be saying "____ Determiner ____" in the wake of such a tragedy.

"The president says, Coordinating conjunction, man!" And for people at home who may not know what that stands for, Adverb stands for 'you only Verb - Base Form once,'" Childers told Williams. "Well you know who's not Adjective, Juan, now? First Name of a Person Adjective."

"It is not a matter appropriate or inappropriate, I don't think it has any connection to Adjective.

Full Name of a Person sad Noun," Williams told the host. "What we're talking about here is a totally different issue, which is the president funning around in pursuit of trying to get more people to sign up for health care."

Ham, the Editor-at-Large at Hot Air, told Childers that while the president does have a tendency of misreading optics in situations such as this, she was more concerned with the nature of the interview itself.

©2026 WordBlanks.com · All Rights Reserved.