_____Place name_____ where _____Noun - Plural_____ _____Verb - Present ends in S_____ in like a _____Noun_____, and _____Verb - Present ends in S_____ like a _____Adjective_____ _____Place name_____ winter. It's a place that provides a _____Adjective_____ _____Noun_____ for _____Adjective_____, life-altering _____Noun - Plural_____. It's a place of _____Adjective_____ _____Noun_____ and _____Noun_____, which _____Verb - Present ends in S_____ with the _____Adjective_____ and _____Adjective_____. It was the perfect place for Joe Redington, Senior. Redington was a dreamer, with a purpose. He championed the plight of the disappearing sled dog, and would take the unreachable and create a world stage for a little-known sport. He would be the ring-leader. He teamed up man and dog, pitting them against Mother Nature over thousands of miles and well over four decades. He would battle a war waged by animal rights groups. Funny, considering the race was started to save the dogs themselves and would eventually do just that. He created a love, and a life, for sled dogs that reaches far beyond Alaska's borders today . He provide the platform where men tested their muster. And while men proved mentally and physically unbreakable, it became a chance for women to show the world who was tough, as well. Women would one day rule this race. And Redington helped create a sport with great rivalries, that started decades ago, but still drive the race forward. The Iditarod is the legacy of one man but continues to be a dream for so many others.
